Pakistan Army Invades India For First Time

From Cable Dispatches

KARACHI, Sept. 9.—Pakistani troops drove into India east of Lahore tonight after pushing Indian forces across the border at Wagah, a Pakistani spokesman said. India neither affirmed nor denied the Pakistani announcement and said only that heavy fighting was in progress in most sectors.

According to radio reports reaching Karachi, Pakistan's first invasion of the war into east Punjab followed a heavy counterattack against Indian tank troops at Wagah, an Indian post on the Indian-Pakistan frontier.

Wagah was the crossing point for India's first invasion of Pakistan last Monday. The second invasion point was at Jassar, 60 miles from Lahore.

Forces of the two nations struggled on the dusty northwest plains to unleash offensives along the routes conquerors have used for centuries.

Neither India nor Pakistan would give precise information on where their armies were fighting. Newsmen were prevented from reaching the area and had to depend upon the information both governments were willing to give out.
